

A brief lecture on Profanity

Chapter 1 by Story Wars

Okay, first of all, you should know that I will be cursing in this story. A LOT. Quite a FUCKING bit, in fact.

Secondly, this probably won't be brief.

Also, did you know cursing creatively shows you have a high intellect?

--

The word "Fuck" is divided into 3 categories. The Passive, the Aggressive, and the Sexual. Of course, there is the passive-aggressive in the middle.

The Passive Fuck

This is usually where you use the word fuck as a simple exclamation, or an exclamation.

Ex. Fuuuuuck, those look nice.

Those are some damn fucking nice girls

But what about the Aggressive fuck?

Chapter 2 by R

The Aggressive use of the word is also an exclamatory statement, but it has a connotation of anger and violence, typically evoked when the speaker is in pain, or when they are annoyed or angry.

Some common examples include:

"Owl! Fucking shit fucking

(To note, it has been scientifically proven that cursing or swearing loudly and complaining, will lessen pain even if only by a small amount.)

"Fuck this, fuck you, fuck me fuck everything, I'm so fucking done."

(This is more of the anger/frustration side of things, if you can not tell)

"I'm going to fucking kill you."

The best way to identify a 'Aggressive Fuck' (not to be confused with the sexual meaning of the word) is not in the surrounding context of the word, but the tone of voice of the user.

The Sexual use is in fact the oldest use of the word 'fuck', originating as early as the 1200s according to some research, although it was rare at that time. The root for fuck comes from a similar word meaning 'to strike' though interesting to note the more common slang for a while in England was 'Swive' as in, 'swivel'.

The aggressive and passive uses of the word both derive from the sexual, which is understandable given the oft used context of such words.

Some common examples of the word include:

"Yeah, they were a good fuck."

"Fucked them good"

Etc, etc.

But this lecture would be dull if we only contained ourselves to a single word, though we could go far more in depth, so let us move on to another word.

Shit, now what word should we go with?

What is shit? Well, you see, there is the literal shit, the metaphorical shit and the exclamatory shit.

Yeah, it's confusing.

Literal Shit is EZ. It's just, well...

Now metaphorical shit is just shit that ain't . So let's say so-and-so puked all over the floor.

You would probably say-

"Holy crap that's a big pile of shit!"

But it's not shit. It's puke.

Exclamatory shit is where we most commonly use it. It's shit in all its glory. You say "SHIT" when you really mean "FUCK" or any other commonly used exclamatory curse word.

Bang your knee? "SHIT!"

Forget your homework? "SHIT!"

Completely fail your English test? You shouldn't have if you read this story, but anyways, "SHIT!"

Donald Trump wins the elections? "#TRUMP2016!"

Oh, right. and "SHIT!"

Now that we have gone through the 3 major categories, we should take care to notice that Fucks also diverge in 3 tiers: the one word fuck, the one phrase fuck, and the one sentence fuck.
